FIRST ROUND
CASE BRIEF

Background

Skin Cafe is a Bangladesh-based premium beauty brand offering science-backed skincare and haircare solutions. Built on research, transparency, and contextual relevance, the brand aims to redefine beauty standards by delivering locally manufactured, high-efficacy, and inclusive products.

Over the past decade, Bangladesh's skincare industry has experienced significant growth, driven by increasing awareness, urbanization, and the influence of global beauty trends. Consumers—especially the younger generation—are gradually adopting structured skincare routines and becoming more conscious about product quality, ingredients, and effectiveness.

Despite this growth, the market remains highly competitive, with both international and local brands competing for consumer attention. Historically, Bangladeshi consumers have shown a strong preference for foreign products due to perceived quality superiority, although local brands are now gaining momentum by offering affordable, locally relevant solutions.

In this evolving landscape, Skin Cafe has recently launched its sunscreen product, aiming to capture the growing demand for effective, climate-appropriate sun protection solutions tailored specifically for Bangladeshi consumers.

Challenges of the Bangladeshi Market

While the skincare industry in Bangladesh is expanding, several structural and behavioral challenges continue to influence consumer perception and purchasing decisions:

Low Consumer Awareness

A significant portion of consumers still lacks a proper understanding of skincare benefits, especially regarding sunscreen usage and long-term skin protection. Limited education on dermatological care and reliance on traditional remedies further slow adoption.

Trust Deficit Toward Local Brands

Historically, consumers have shown lower trust in locally manufactured skincare products due to concerns about quality, safety, and authenticity. Many consumers still perceive international brands as more reliable.

Prevalence of Counterfeit Products

The widespread presence of fake and unregulated cosmetics in the market has significantly damaged consumer confidence. Many buyers struggle to distinguish between authentic and counterfeit products, leading to skepticism toward all brands.

High Market Competition

The market is saturated with both local and international brands, making differentiation challenging. Foreign brands still dominate a large portion of the market, intensifying competitive pressure.

Price Sensitivity

Bangladeshi consumers are highly price-sensitive, often prioritizing affordability over brand loyalty. This creates a challenge for premium positioning while maintaining accessibility.

Cultural and Behavioral Barriers

- Skincare (especially sunscreen) is still not a daily habit for many consumers
- Misconceptions such as “sunscreen is only needed in summer” persist
- Male consumers often show low engagement in skincare routines

Your Task

Your team is required to design a comprehensive and insight-driven marketing strategy for SkinCafe Sunscreen that goes beyond conventional campaign planning.

In addition to developing a structured marketing roadmap, your team must critically address the trust gap and perception barriers associated with locally produced skincare products in Bangladesh.

Your solution must not rely on generic or theoretical approaches. Instead, your team is expected to demonstrate evidence-based thinking, contextual understanding, and original strategic insights derived from observation, research, or logical assumptions grounded in the Bangladeshi market.

Key Expectations from Your Team:

- Develop a strategic approach to build consumer trust in Skin Cafe as a credible, high-efficacy local brand
- Identify and address key consumer misconceptions and behavioral barriers related to sunscreen usage
- Design a 12-month integrated marketing campaign roadmap aligned with seasonal, cultural, and behavioral insights
- Propose realistic and actionable execution plans across both online and offline channels
- Incorporate original consumer insights (primary observation, informal surveys, or logical reasoning) to justify your strategy
- Demonstrate how your strategy will create long-term brand equity, not just short-term visibility
